What is Collaborating in a team

Collaborating in a team is something every professional encounters. Sometimes it goes smoothly, but often it leads to frustration. For instance, during team meetings everything seems fine, but at the coffee machine, team members gossip and complain in one-on-one conversations. Or agreements are made without everyone's input. Do you recognize this?

In this training, you'll learn how to handle such frustrations. We will discuss the team development process and the five essential factors for good collaboration. Additionally, we'll explore how different roles emerge in a team and how they influence collaboration.

During this interactive training, you'll team up with fellow students. Through team exercises, you'll experience the impact of these five factors and receive tips and tricks to apply in your own team(s).
